

Lauren Burn-Margesson

Quirky, progressive and consummate thinker - passionate about food, history, photography, the environment and travel. Former communications lead for local conservation agency and contributing writer for island based Cultural Voice E-zine, Lauren holds a strong belief in the need to incorporate a bottom-up approach in plans for sustainable development, conservation, cultural representation, and social equality. She was born and raised in the sleepy capital city of Belmopan and moved to San Ignacio in 2014. A sometimes student of yoga, and an ardent supporter of mom and pop shops and indigenous artisans - Lauren brings to the CELA team a warmth and eagerness for the sharing of culture in meaningful and authentic ways.