

Ted McKoy, Hopkins Village

I have come to call myself a Social Entrepreneur; I am from Hopkins Village, a Garifuna community in Southern Belize where I have developed the community's first ever locally owned Information Communication Technology (ICT) Center. In my research, I learned the term "digital divide," which simply put, is the difference between people that have access to information and those that have little or no access to technology. Realizing that so many of the people in community were on the negative side of this divide, I, along with two other co-founders developed Inter-Plus Solutions. It is an ICT center that is designed to increase student, teacher, worker and community organization's efficiency by providing access to information via technology, computers and the internet.
